Small is beautiful

For more than 40 years we have specialised in dwarf bulbs. While most of our daffodils are vigorous enough to take the rough and tumble of the open garden some of the tiniest gems are best given a little more protection, especially as many originate in the dry south of Spain. These we grow in pots in a tunnel and this year the spectacular display was only surpassed by the overwhelming scent – most are jonquils. Although they look delicate they are in fact easy and rewarding pot plants for cold glass – just requiring a dry summer dormancy to perform their annual miracle. Some will grow outside given optimum conditions. We have included a lot more this year: Idol, cordubensis, wilkomii etc.

some wonderful Dutch Iris (Silvery Blue and White van Vliet). Both are equally good for garden display. Other favourites to cut are tulips – their wayward contortions never fail to enchant. Although many of the tulips in the borders are replaced annually some have proved themselves to be very long lived, especially the fosteriana cultivars. Purissima (page 34) needs no introduction, repeating well, but every spring a lovely salmon pink cultivar delights us. For years we called it the super market tulip as we could never remember its name - Albert

Other exciting introductions are the rare white Sternbergia candida (page 5) and the extraordinary new Muscari Bling Bling with its glistening jewel like flowers of intense blue (page 18). I love cutting flowers for the house and have decided to include some of my favourites- 2 excellent Anemone de caen - bicolor (white) & Bordeaux (vintage claret) and

Our front cover features a bulb we have long advocated. There can be few bulbs that are as exuberant as the Ipheion (page 16) but these S Americans are surprisingly little known. They are perfect for a dry sunny border – even growing in gravel, or they can be massed in pots. They make a good edging mixed with grape hyacinths. They are honey scented and can be cut as the perfect foil for small daffs.
